

PM, burger chain cop a real serve

YOU know when veteran band the Screaming Jets are on stage you're going to get more than your money's worth.

The fans at Chelsea Heights Hotel last Sunday got even more than that. Vocalist Dave Gleason gave the much-publicised Hungry Jack's 4520-kilojoule Quad Stack Burger a real spray, describing it as a one-way ticket to obesity and flatulence.

Gleason didn't say whether he had consumed one of them, but from the look of him he had not succumbed to the stack, which has four beef patties, four slices of cheese, two rashers of bacon, barbecue sauce and two sugared buns. That adds up to 71g of fat, 34.7g of saturated fat and 1930 milligrams of salt.

Before returning to the music, he also gave Prime Minister Kevin Rudd a bit of a serve, saying the only good thing he had done since winning office was the "apology".

Beef it up: Screaming Jets in full swing.

Picture: Gary Sissons