

Jets still flying high

By VANESSA HANDLEY

THE Screaming Jets believe they still have plenty to offer the Australian music industry.

The Newcastle band are celebrating the release of their latest album, Do Ya, with a national tour and have scheduled a performance at Doyalson-Wyee RSL this Friday, November 28.

The controversial Australian rockers are survivors in the music industry with six studio albums over 17 years. Despite a constantly changing line-up, the Screaming Jets managed to write enough songs and have enough stability to release Do Ya, their first album in more than eight years.

The album is described by front man Dave Gleeson as capturing the true essence of Australian rock'n'roll and features gutsy, tight tracks.

Tickets for the gig cost $25 and are available from Doyalson-Wyee RSL.

Phone 4390 0622 for information and bookings.

SURVIVORS: After 17 years, the Screaming Jets still have passion